Photography was introduced in 1839 : but at first photographic emulsions needed such long exposures that the recording of moving subjects seemed impossible. At least as early as 1844, photographic series of subjects posed in different positions have been created to either suggest a motion sequence or to document a range of different viewing angles. The advent of stereoscopic photography, with early experiments in the 1840s and commercial success since the early 1850s, raised interest in completing the photographic medium with the addition of means to capture colour and motion. In 1849, Joseph Plateau published about the idea to combine his invention of the phénakisticope with the stereoscope, as suggested to him by stereoscope inventor Charles Wheatstone, and use photographs of plaster sculptures in different positions to be animated in the combined device. In 1852, Jules Duboscq patented such an instrument as the Stéréoscope-fantascope, ou Bïoscope. He marginally advertised it for a short period. It was a commercial failure and no complete instrument has yet been located, but one bioscope disc has been preserved in the Plateau collection of the Ghent University. It has stereoscopic photographs of a machine.

Mid-week on March 4, 2020, Cinemark fell by 0.53% and AMC by 3.5%.179 That day, No Time to Die had its release postponed by March 6, AMCs shares had fallen by 30% over two weeks. Between March 4 and 6, Cineworlds shares fell 20%,7 and fell another 24% on March 12.180 The falls result from a combination of AMC closing selected cinemas in Italy179 and the lack of confidence in the market created by No Time to Die moving its release date other new releases on its original opening weekend will not be as much of a draw for moviegoers and could result in financial losses for the chains showing them.18 The in-theater advertising company National CineMedia also reported stock falling, by 1.25% on March 4.179
